Improving the health outcomes of looked after children and young people

Having grown up in the care system herself, Áine is interested in improving the health outcomes of looked after children and young people. Her research looks at the health experiences and health beliefs of children and young people in care. She is also interested in looking at how professionals put policies and guidelines into practice, and hopes to make recommendations to policy makers in order to improve experiences of the health and social care system. She hopes that these recommendations will equip professionals with the knowledge needed to empower looked after children and young people to take control of their own health.

Áine is undertaking her DPhil research at the Rees Centre for Research in Fostering and Education, based in the Department of Education and has been awarded a doctoral scholarship from the Wellcome Trust. She is supervised by Professor Judy Sebba, Director of the Rees Centre and Dr Nikki Luke, Research Fellow at the Rees Centre.

If you have any questions or would like to know more about Áine’s research then please get in touch:

Áine Rose Kelly
Care leaver / DPhil Student / Wellcome Trust Scholar

Email: Aine.kelly@education.ox.ac.uk
Twitter: @AineRoseKelly
Web: www.reescentre.education.ox.ac.uk